Jean Charest rejects immigration report's call to lose crucifix

The political temperature over Quebec's identity is so scalding, the provincial government didn't bother waiting for the official unveiling of a report on religion and minorities before trashing its most symbolic recommendation: Removing the crucifix from the National Assembly.

The swift reaction in Quebec City belied the central conclusion of the Bouchard-Taylor commission on the furious debate over so-called "reasonable accommodations" of religious minorities - that the identity crisis in Quebec is a matter of perception, not reality.

The commissioners, McGill University philosopher Charles Taylor and internationally renowned Université du Québec sociologist Gérard Bouchard, conducted a sprawling study of subjects from secularism in public places, to racial discrimination, to the insecurities of Quebec's French-Canadian population.

"There is no crisis ... one could even say we are far from it, despite the impressions people might have," said Bouchard, adding "the only crisis is one of perception ... we came close to skidding out of control. I think all Quebecers should draw a lesson from

But in politics, perception is reality, and so angst over questions of identity was front and centre yester-

Premier Jean Charest personally tabled a motion to preserve the National Assembly's crucifix before Bouchard and Taylor had even spoken at a news conference to divulge their report; it was unanimously adopted.

> "We won't rewrite history ... The church has played a major role in who we are today as a society, the crucifix is more than a religious symbol," Charest told a news conference in Quebec City.

The minority Liberals also issued a proposal to have new arrivals sign written undertakings that they will "adhere to our society's common values," summarized as gender equality, Charter rights and the defence of the French language.

Action democratique du Quebec Leader Mario Dumont said Quebec should adopt its own "founding document" that spells out "Quebec's cultural heritage." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Solid crowds greet pro baseball's return to capital

By TIM WIECLAWSKI Metro Ottawa

More that 4,200 fans witnessed professional baseball's rebirth in Ottawa last

When Ottawa's Mike Kusiewicz threw the first pitch to the opposing New Jersey Jackals — a ball the Ottawa Rapidz's inaugural season officially began.

Kusiewicz threw three more balls, then struck out two. But many of the 4,246 that braved threatening skies to attend had not yet settled in before Rapidz lead-off batter Jared Lemieux faced his first pitch.

"It rained at 5:30 (p.m.), which is usually death," said Can-Am league commissioner Miles Wolfe. "I was impressed when I drove up at how many people were here, considering the rain. I think everything is going good."

The late afternoon rain may have caused some to hesitate, leading to a last-minute crunch at the ticket windows once skies cleared. As anthems were belted out, long lines remained and some fans reported waiting 30 minutes to get tickets.

Still, team officials called it. a good re-start for pro baseball here — the first since the triple-A Ottawa Lynx of the International League left town last year. With ticket prices that max out at $10 for > adults, many Ottawans seemed willing to give the Rapidz

into the habit of coming here. Hopefully, we'll get teens and 20-somethings thinking this is a good place to go for a date," said Rapidz CEO Rick Anderson, "We've got a nice stadium. It's a nice environment."

Many former Lynx fans turned out, ready to embrace another pro baseball team.

"It's baseball in Ottawa. Other than that, you have to go to Toronto to see another game," said Krista Kipp.

North Gower native Fraser Robinson, a left-handed pitcher for the Rapidz, didn't get to start last night and was third in the pitching order, but the local product had supporters in the stands.

"All my high school friends, none of them have seen me throw, so they're all excited. They've been e-mailing saying 'when's your first game, we want to come watch'."

The downpoint? The 6-0 score for N.J - a result Ottawa will want to improve on 'Rapidzly.'

Fashion Week talent shines close to home

By TRACEY TONG Metro Ottawa

It's hard not to notice Quinn Taylor. And the six-foot-two, 17-year-old aspiring model certainly hopes that's the case this weekend.

The Bell High School student hopes that she'll be offered a job that gets her foot into the door of a tough industry to crack when she prowls the catwalk for eight designers local during the first-Ottawa ever Fashion Week.

"I'm hoping it goes really well and that I'll get a few jobs," she said.

In his first big fashion show debut, 19-year-old Matt Gutman is also hoping to get picked up for modelling jobs. A lot of dreams like that can come true this weekend, said Samar Rashid. co-founder of the Ottawabased Canadian International Modelling Agency, which is the main host of the Ottawa Fashion Week happening at the Arts Court through Saturday.

"There are buyers from Toronto and Montreal coming in to see what Ottawa has to offer. There's a huge chance that some of these designs will be picked up by buyers or stores or the models will be recruited.'

Rashid said the event is the first large-scale fashion event for Ottawa - a city that too often sees its best and brightest leave for Toronto and Montreal to seek their opportunities.

"There's a lot of people here interested in fashion and there's a lot of beautiful people here. But they don't have a place to show off their talents."

Ottawa Fashion Week is a great idea, said Ashley Struthers, 25, who, along with fellow Richard Robinson Fashion De-Academy sign graduates Jessica Struthers, 26, and Emma Campbell, 21, are there to promote their company, Me et Moi.

"It allows designers to stay in Ottawa. They don't have to leave to be successful."

Gatineau swimsuit designer Veronique Boileau, who co-owns One of Us Swimwear, said she "jumped at the chance" to participate. "It'll be exciting to see the (swimsuits) on the models."

"I'm just amazed by the talent that Ottawa has," said Rashid. "The designers, when you see their clothes, you think, 'you mean you didn't go to school in Paris?' A lot of them went to school at Algonquin or at Richard Robinson."

Re: To the editor: The Glass Ceiling Effect is called this because the limitation is not immediately apparent and is normally an unofficial policy.

This has in turn called for corporations to begin setting aside a certain percentage of jobs for women in order to "combat discrimination".

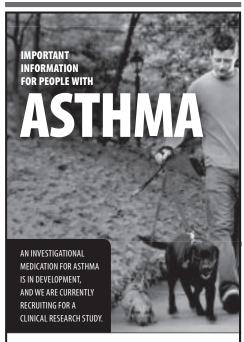

I began to ask my peers about how they felt about the setting aside of jobs specifically for women, and was shocked by the female response: The majority agreed. The reasons varied from "It's still a man's world" to "We should be appreciative we're given this opportunity to get ahead."

As a woman, I do not see the glass ceiling effect as a reason to accept a "handout" when given one. I see it as the drive to excel as high as possible and if that's not feasible in one corporation, to start one where it is. It's due to the mindframe of settling for what's given that women are living under a glass cover in today's society.

The credential for advancement should, and only be, merit, regardless of gender.

State overstepped rights: Ruling

Texas overstepped its authority when it removed some of about 460 children from a polygamist compound last month, a state appeals court ruled yesterday.

The ruling is the latest twist in an unfolding saga that has riveted Texas with lurid tales of adolescent brides, teen pregnancies and a secretive religious sect following its faith in the state.

Texas Child Protective Services and heavily armed police units last month raided the isolated compound in west Texas and removed the kids in response to allegations of abuse. But the appeals court said that the state had not proven that the children were in immediate physical danger, and therefore were improperly separated from their parents.

Oceans becoming acidic

Carbon emissions are making water corrosive: Study

Carbon dioxide spewed by human activities has made ocean water so acidic that it is eating away at the shells and skeletons of starfish, coral, clams and other sea creatures, scientists said yesterday.

Marine researchers knew that ocean acidification, as it's called, was occurring in deep water far from land. What they called "truly astonishing" was the appearance of this damaging phenomenon on the research in journal Science

This change has been observed over the last three decades, the scientists said in research published in the iournal Science.

Pacific North American continental shelf, stretching from Mexico to Canada

"This means that ocean acidification may be seriously impacting our marine life on our continental shelf right now, today," said Richard Feely of the Pacific Marine Environmental Laboratory, part of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

Other continental shelf regions around the world are likely to face the same fate, he said

Plenty of natural activities, including human breath, send the greenhouse gas carbon dioxide into the atmosphere, but for the last 200 years or so, industrial processes that involve the burning of fossil fuels such as coal and petroleum have pushed emissions

Oceans have long been repositories for the carbon dioxide, absorbing some 525 billion tons of the climatewarming substance over the last two centuries — about one-third of all human-generated carbon dioxide for that period. But the daily absorption of 22 million tons of the stuff has changed the chemistry and biology of the oceans, turning it corrosive and making it difficult or impossible for some animals to produce their calcium carbonate shells and skeletons, the researchers said.

330-llb sow lives in her own blue hut in Taipei

The sole tenant of 151 Ti-Hua Street, Taipei pays no rent, does no work and won't mind being called a fat pig. She's a 150-kg (330 lb) sow.

The pig's owner, a middleaged man who declined to be interviewed, put her up at the tiny, blue-painted hut about two years ago when she got too big to share a living space with humans, neighbours say.

Although shops in this busy commercial area sell pork, the sow is seen as a local celebrity, rather than a stinky nuisance, and lives off scraps from her human neighbours.

"Fabulous, tame and very big," marvelled Deng Yuncheng, 66, who drove past the sleeping pig and her home on his motor scooter yesterday.

"It's clean and doesn't stink."

Neighbours say the sow's owner regularly cleans the hut and the black, white and pink animal, who often saunters out on hot days to the refrigerator of a nearby roadside

Online love brief, blind, study finds

Matches made over the Internet often do not last because people end up choosing unsuitable partners and forming emotional bonds before meeting face-to-face, an Australian university researcher has found.

Women were especially susceptible to finding Mr. Wrong, as they tend to be attracted by witty comments or clever emails, said psychologist Matthew Bambling from the Queensland University of Technology.

"You can never assume things are the way they seem online," Bambling Reuters yesterday.

"There's definitely a dis-inhibition affect online," Bambling said later, with people more likely to exaggerate their good points while hiding anything negative.

Court ruling puts buyout in jeopardy

BCE Inc. shares fell 12 per cent yesterday on fears that a Quebec court ruling could kill its $34.8 billion buyout by a group of investors led by the Ontario Teachers' Pension Plan.

The Quebec Court of Appeal late on Wednesday sided with debtholders who had complained the transaction — the world's largest leveraged buyfuture fallout

Legal experts said the Quebec court ruling will have wide-ranging implications if the high court lets it stand, as it will mean companies will have to balance interests of common shareholders against those of other investors.

The court said BCE, Canada's biggest telecom company, failed to prove the buyout could have been structured to provide a satisfactory price for the company's shares while avoiding an adverse effect on the debenture holders.

The company has filed a motion with Canada's Supreme Court for a fasttrack appeal of the Quebec ruling, and said the timing of the deal's close hangs on that decision.

UNASUL South American trade summit

A soldier patrols a street yesterday ahead of the Union of South American Nations (UNASUL) summit at the Itamaraty Palace today in Brasilia. UNASUL is a fledgling and intergovernmental union that will unite two existing free-trade organizations — Mercosur and the Andean Community — as part of a continuing process of South American integration. It is modelled on the European Union.

Ford to cut jobs at Windsor plant

Motor Co. said yesterday it could slash more than 400 jobs at the Windsor, Ont.,

plant where it makes engines for pickup trucks and SUVs, as part of the company's shift to focus on more fuel-efficient vehicles.

Buzz Hargrove, president of the Canadian Auto Workers union, said the union would look into buyout packages, but with all the recent layoffs at Ford, which has struggled amid weak U.S. sales and high fuel prices, laid-off workers would likely be left with little protection.

Bank of Canada

Banks need new set of tools: Carney

CREDIT CRUNCH The recent turmoil in global credit markets had eased in recent weeks but policy-makers must not to be complacent and should develop new ways of averting future market meltdowns, Bank of Canada Governor Mark Carney said yesterday.

In a speech to the New York Association of Business Economics, Carney said central banks should consider a new set of tools for intervening in markets at times of rapid credit growth and overly easy financing, thus helping to avert crises like the credit crunch.

The Dallas Stars signed Brett Hull, left, and Les Jackson to threeyear contracts as co-general managers yesterday. Both were named interim co-general managers on Nov. 13, 2007.

Deals shaped Cup-bound Pens

Deadline trades were key to playoff run: GM

The Detroit Red Wings can be counted among the Stanley Cup contenders just about every year.

The Pittsburgh Penguins didn't become true Stanley Cup contenders until Feb. 26, just before 3 p.m. It was trade deadline day, when the Penguins acquired sniper Marian Hossa, along with forward Pascal Dupuis and defenceman Hal Gill.

It was a day for jittery general managers to wear their best poker faces and find out if they had the guts to make the bold move. Penguins GM Ray Shero had been feeling out Thrashers GM Don Waddell since the all-star game in Atlanta, but had given up hope of landing Hossa.

"That morning, at 10 o'clock, we didn't have anything going," said Shero. "By 3 p.m., when all the deals fell into place, it was satisfying and nerve-racking all at the same time.

"Looking back to Feb. 26, it's how our team came together. Those guys have really helped us. Looking back, it feels good."

Sidney Crosby, left, and Marian Hossa celebrate after eliminating the Philadelphia Flyers in the Eastern Conference finals. Hossa and other trade deadline acquisitions have proven to be a big factor in the Penguins' success.

If trade deadline deals are judged by a team's success, then Shero may soon be hailed a genius if the Pens beat Detroit for the Stanley Cup, which begins tomorrow night in Motown.

The Red Wings made only one move that day, bringing in veteran defenceman Brad Stuart. GM Ken Holland was happy with a team that was dominating the league and would go on to finish first overall. The Wings were built on savvy drafting, patient development and the odd free agent acquisi-

The Penguins, by contrast, fast-forwarded themselves into contention when Shero made that bold move just minutes before the deadline. He surrendered Erik Christensen, Colby Armstrong, prospect Angelo Esposito and a first-round pick for Hossa and Dupuis. Shero had already acquired Gill from the Leafs for two draft picks.

Hossa, a sniper on Sidney Crosby's right wing, has dispelled the ghosts that haunted his past playoff appearances. Dupuis is a solid two-way player, Gill a stay-at-home blue-liner.

In acquiring the trio of veterans, the message sent to the dressing room was as important as the new players.

"That day we said, 'We could win this year. They're not waiting," defenceman Ryan Whitney recalled. "People talked about our team as a team that could win it in two or three years, and all of a sudden, we get Hossa and Hal Gill and Dupuis, and you say, 'All right, we're going for it this year. The time is now."

Henin exit opens door for Sharapova to shine

World No. 1 aims for 1st French title

Justine Henin's decision to call it quits at 25 earlier this month has not so much left a hole at the top of the French Open draw as a gaping chasm which new world No. 1 Maria Sharapova will be aching to fill.

Henin has won four of the last five grand slams at Roland Garros and her shock retirement has left the field as open as if Roger Federer hung up his strings a week before Wimbledon.

With Henin gone, Serena Williams, victor over sister Venus in the 2002 final, is the only former champion in the 128-strong field, and form and history point elsewhere for the successor to the diminutive Belgian's crown.

The closest Sharapova, 21, has come to winning on the red dust in Paris was last year, but a crushing 6-2, 6-1 loss to Ana Ivanovic in the semis suggested she may never win a slam on clay.

All eyes will be on newly crowned world No. 1 Maria Sharapova of Russia as she looks to win her first ever French Open title in Paris beginning next week.

Despite a niggling calf injury she looks well set to end her Paris title slump.

"Last year I basically played without a shoulder and I got to the semifinal," Sharapova said earlier this month.

"At a grand slam stage you are going to do whatever it takes," she said.

uto racing does nothing for me – in fact, I think it's a stretch to even classify it as a sport but I will check out the Indianapolis 500 this Sunday, and I urge you to do likewise

We could see history. Several auto-racing experts suspect a female — 26-year-old Danica Patrick of Wisconsin - could emerge victorious. And, if she does, we're told the world will be changed.

"She will change it by becoming an agent of reform, by using her victory to convince men to start measuring a woman by her skill instead of her bra size," says Ian O'Connor of Fox Sports.

"It will be a hell of a story if Patrick pulls it off, and an inspiration to young female athletes who have little use for the word can't."

Patrick already has won a significant race this year – the Japan 300 - but her Indy opposition will be more formidable And yet, oddsmakers favour only five driv-

She has the ability to bleed every lap possible out of a tank of ethanol. She regularly outdistances rivals on a full tank, partly because, at 100 pounds, she's the lightest driver in

"You get a variation of audiences from place to place – They tend to be more standoffish in London than they are in New York. But the best is that we can actually speak the same language as the people in North America.

We're often embarrassed about not being able to speak French or German when we play in those countries.

Stops north of the border only include Toronto. Montreal and Vancouver, but Los Campesinos! has a couple of Canadian connections beyond the comparisons the band gets with Arcade Fire ("I suspect it's because we use violins a lot," said Ollie.).

The 2007 single We Throw Parties, You Throw Knives is a shoutout to their pals You Say Party! We Say Die! The Vancouverbased indie rockers supported Los Campesinos! for several European dates, and crashed out at vocalist Gareth Campesinos!' house.

The more significant connection is with Broken Social Scene. The band recorded Hold On Now, Youngster... in Toronto with producer Dave Newfeld of BSS and is signed to the collective's Arts & Crafts label. No immediate plans to record with the notoriously collaborative group, however.

"Not unless they want to do Broken Social Scene Presents Los Campesinos!" Ollie laughs.

Timeless classic

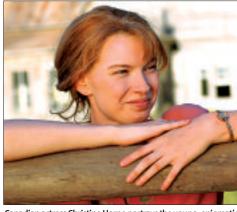

The Stone Angel

Director Kari Skogland

By CHRIS ATCHISON for Metro Ottawa

REVIEW VETERAN CANA-DIAN TELEVISION director Kari Skogland has tamed a beast that has conquered many young Canuck students with her adaptation of the classic Margaret Laurence novel The Stone Angel.

The book, dissected by youngsters in English classes from coast to coast as part of school curriculums for years, has been finely translated to the big screen by screenwriter-director Skogland, whose passion for Laurence's 1964 masterwork is obvious. For those who weren't required to read the book in high school, The Stone Angel traces the life of 94-year-old Hagar Currie Shipley (30 Days' Ellen Burstyn) as she's about to be sent to live in a nursing home by her son Marvin (Spider-Man 3's Dylan Baker) and daughter-in-law Doris (The Canadian actress Christine Horne portrays the young, enigmatic Hagar Shipley in Kari Skogland's The Stone Angel.

Day After Tomorrow's Sheila McCarthy).

Hagar manages to escape her nursing home fate by heading out on the lam, all the while recalling details from her past — her numerous lapses in judgment, her failed relationship with her husband Bram (The Break-Up's Cole Hauser) and conflicted relationship with her sons, to name a few.

Hagar manages to find closure with Marvin in what can only be described as a sweeping meditation on aging and death that will surely force many audience members to ponder their own mortality.

Canadian actress Christine Horne does a fine job portraying the young, enigmatic Hagar, but in the end it's Academy Awardwinner Ellen Burstyn who injects life into Hagar Shipley, in a performance that could easily earn her a seventh Oscar nomination.

Skogland has successfully done justice to Laurence's book, largely avoiding the mistakes that so many filmmakers encounter when trying to adapt epic novels for the big screen.

Horne steps up to Stone Angel

for Metro Ottawa

tepping onto a film set for the first time is difficult for any ac-

Stepping on a set to play an iconic Canadian literary character is another matter altogether, as Aurora, Ont.-born actress Christine Horne discovered when she took on the role of the young Hagar Currie Shipley in the screen adaptation of Margaret Laurence's classic 1964 novel The Stone Angel.

The 26-year-old Horne relished the opportunity to play the conflicted character – one noted for her frailties and humanness qualities which have come to define the novel as a whole

Taking on the complex part was tough, Horne admits, but sharing a role with Oscar-winner Ellen Burstyn, who portrays Shipley in her twilight years, was particularly daunting.

"It was a challenge partly because the material was tricky and I was spanning quite a few years.

"I'd never done film before and I was sharing a role with Ellen Burstyn so it was a set of challenges on every conceivable level." Like so many who have been exposed to, and come to appreciate, The Stone Angel's thematic undertones, Horne began a meditation on her own mortality during filming, much as the nonagenarian Shipley does throughout the film in a series of flashbacks as she searches for emotional closure. "The people in my life who are (in their nineties like Shipley) I've frozen in time," Horne explains.

"I've had this feeling that my grandma's always been my grandma, but she's had an entire life behind her and she has been

"It also made me look at the decisions that I have or have not made, and look at the experiences that I go through, and think about how they're going to add up and how they're going to contribute to the person that I am when, God willing, I make it to 90, the person that I'm going to be then because of the things that I'm doing now."

Coming back to The City

Cattrall needed out of New York

By CHRIS ATCHISON for Metro Ottawa

FEATURE THE STARS of Sex And The City can finally put four years of speculation behind them.

A big screen adaptation of their hit 1998-2004 television show is finally set to strut its way into theatres, returning Carrie, Samantha, Charlotte and Miranda to their legions of Manolo Blahnik-wearing, Cosmopolitan-drinking fans.

But that long march into the feature film limelight came with its fair share of trials and tribulations. Namely, tabloid speculation that Canadian star Kim Cattrall, who reprises her role as the seductive and sex-obsessed Samantha Jones in the film, was the cast holdout delaying production on the film.

Accusations rang out that Cattrall was feuding with series star Sarah Jessica Parker and that she refused to do a film for less money than Parker.

Cattrall explains when the series wrapped in 2004, she was in a difficult emotional situation and needed time away from the show and New York to regroup and regain her footing.

"At the same time (the series was ending) I was going through a divorce," the Courtenay, B.C.-raised actress explains.

"I had been through another divorce, but it had been private and this was incredibly public.

"I woke up one morning and it was all over the (New York) Post ... I've been very honest about many things, but I really didn't feel this was anybody's business.

"Then the show coming to an end and my dad was diagnosed with dementia shortly after that and that was the toughest thing of all ... I needed to take a timeout with my family.

"That's when I went back to Canada, started my own production company and decided I was going to spend less time in New York away from my family, I was going to spend more time in the vicinity of Canada."

Cattrall says she was simply unable to build the emotional strength needed to convincingly resuscitate Samantha's sultry sensibilities.

By early 2007, however, the 51-year-old found herself in a better place her father had stabilized, she began dating, and accepted a script from Sex And The City writer-executive producer Michael Patrick King, who would go on to direct the feature film.

The rest is history, but in hindsight, Cattrall admits she has no regrets about waiting to make the film.

» Sex And The City opens next Friday.

Kim Cattrall dismisses tabloid reports of dissent between her Sex And The City co-stars, explaining she was going through a tough time personally when the TV show ended its run in 2004.

Postal director is ready for critics

for Metro Ottawa

FEATURE BEING REGARDED as the worst in any field can have its perks. Just ask the controversial, critically detested, German filmmaker Uwe Boll (BloodRayne, In The Name Of The King: A Dungeon Siege Tale).

Writer-producer-director Boll has been making video game adaptations for roughly five years now, a period in which he's come to be regarded in critical circles as one of – some would argue THE – worst filmmakers of all time

But here's the upshot: the more they put him down, the less Boll cares. Instead of taking the criticism personally, as he once did, the new film Postal, based on the first-person shooter video game of the same name, is Boll's way of thumbing his nose at critics.

The social and political satire takes aim at everyone, as Boll explains in an interview with Metro, leave audiences of all races, religions and nationalities offended.

"What they think about me they think about me," Boll says of his critics

"I cannot really change it. If you read reviews of movies like House Of The Dead and In The Name Of The King, I have a feeling that people don't really look at movies anymore and they judge the movies like the worst of the worst, but if you go a little into detail and ask people was it really worse than Jumper or 10,000 BC or tons of other movies that come out each year? Normally the answer is no."

To say Postal pushes buttons, perhaps to the limits of poor taste and beyond, would be an understatement. The film satirizes the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, rips Muslim extremist groups, religious cults and religion in general, as well as poking fun at Nazism in Germany - and that's only in the first half.

Uwe Boll

Boll, who has literally fought his critics in boxing matches - he trained for the fights, they didn't - and pummeled a few of his harsher editorial adversaries, argues that there is a place for what he calls this type of 'absurd' come-

"I think movies like Life Of Brian would never get financed in the world today and I felt that, and I still feel that, Postal is one of the rare, ruthless, anarchistic comegood that a movie like Postal is made."

Others might disagree, but Boll, whose past use of German tax loopholes to finance his films, cementing his maverick status and allowing him to continue producing, really couldn't care less. Now that those tax laws have been tightened, placing limitations on write-offs for money-losing films, Boll has sought other means to make his movies such as cutting his budgets.

For the 42-year-old, that change in approach has signaled an opportunity to make more personal films, ones that may once again incur the wrath of critics. Not that he seems to mind.

"I'm planning to make a movie in the Sudan about the genocide ... diving into the Darfur and Sudan world without having a lot of American stars in the movie "

The world waits with baited breath.

Sex And The City, minus sex

HELL COMES TO YOUR

HOUSE: The New Thirty is the title of a new sitcom being developed for Rosie O'Donnell and Fran Drescher, according to an AM New York story yesterday. No network was mentioned as the future home for the series, which will feature the two women as high school friends who reconnect with each other as tenants in a Manhattan apartment building.

"It's kind of Sex And The City but we ain't getting any," Drescher told In Touch Weekly. "It'll probably be more like 'The Odd Couple.' I'll be Oscar and [Rosie will] be Felix."

Well, there's a show that will probably be made infinitely more bearable by closed captioning.

ALL GLORY IS FLEETING.

UH, I GUESS: : It seems I only heard about her last week, but already Tila Tequila has proclaimed fame, wanting and expressing her desire to retire from the spotlight with the conclusion of this season of MTV's A Shot At Love With Tila Tequila. Famous mostly for wearing very little in magazines and being bisexual on cable television, Tequila told Entertainment Weekly that "this lifestyle is fun and I worked hard for it, but I think in the long run, it's a lot. I just wanna be in love for the rest of my life and move to an island and have kids "

"I wanna do meaningful stuff," the diminutive model said. "After a while you reach your goals and then what?"

Indeed. After achieving the lofty goal of lending the cover of Penthouse her youthful "credibility" for an issue and making hunky dudes cry like babies on TV with a show that's probably up there with The L Word among shows that men secretly TiVo and watch when their wives or girlfriends are in bed, just what else is there? There are those of us, however, who hope to see Ms. Tequila do for string theory what she did for reality dating shows – after all, is there anything that can't be improved with cowboy hats and buckskin bikini tops?

HBO-VER: Frank Rich, the New York Times drama critic once known as the "Butcher of Broadway," has been signed on by HBO as its creative consultant, the cable network announced this week. While some critics such as Tim Goodman wondered why the struggling network would want to be perceived as "more New York-centric," the move at least has the unspoken advantage of preventing Rich from writing about HBO's lackluster shows due to conflict of interest.

Considering how cheaply the average critic can be bought, personally, I can be had for the price of a 52inch plasma and a year's supply of Red Bull.

Rick McGinnis writes about music, movies, books and television, but not opera.

On her latest album, Alanis Morissette reveals her grown-up take on love, loss and moving on.

By Karen Bliss Contributing Writer

lanis Morissette is all smiles as she sits for an interview in the depths of Toronto's Air Canada Centre, just 35 minutes before she opens for Matchbox Twenty. Other less confident musicians might refuse to do press before a concert; Morissette, however, doesn't appear stressed at all.

You don't have to be a celeb sleuth to figure out that her ex, Ryan Reynolds, is the likely muse for Torch, a song from her forthcoming album, Flavors of Entanglement. The pair announced their split last year, and Reynolds is now engaged to Scarlett Johansson.

"Torch is the I-miss-you song," says Morissette. "I don't ever talk about who it's about, but I think you can draw your own conclusions," she says, laughing.

With the exception of the Reynolds relationship, Morissette has only graced the media in a positive light. So, what exactly is a "rockbottom moment" for this talented, wealthy and wise woman? "When there is no more sense of control. It's that proverbial, suicidal 'I don't want to do this anymore' moment."

As for finding new love, Morissette realizes that she isn't an easy catch. "I'm too exhausting to be loved," she says. "I'm still on a recovery journey."

The launch of Biotherm's new anti-cellulite line, Celluli Laser, inspired ELLE to share some tips for smooth, satiny skin. Avoid sugar, which triggers the glycation process and causes cellulite. Exercise to increase circulation and prevent fluid buildup. Exfoliate to stimulate circulation and smooth skin. Camouflage with a self-tanner.

OCEAN SPRAY Cool off this summer with deep-water facial mists. Is your skin feeling hot and bothered? Pollution, sunshine, humidity — all of these can aggre vate an otherwise-calm complexion. Facial mists based on sea-water minerals, essential oils and botanicals promise to take the sting out of summer skin. "They're very soothing," says Dr. Jensen Yeung, medical director of the dermatology program at Women's College Hospital in Toronto. One of the key benefits of facial mists, says Yeung, is "the prevention of water loss when they are applied immediately prior to using a moisturizer." In the summer, spraying your skin regularly can also lessen the redness that comes from sun exposure. TRISSE LOXLEY

The first comprehensive retrospective of Yves Saint Laurent's life and career opens this month at The Montreal Museum of Fine Arts. Co-curated by French haute couture expert Florence Müller (formerly of the Musée des Arts de la Mode), the exhibition spans 40 years to include the artist's craft (showcasing Saint Laurent's original sketches and finished garments) and his literary and artistic influences (from Cocteau to Proust). The final area is devoted to the pop culture phenomenon that is Le Smoking, the iconic tuxedo jacket introduced in 1966 (May 29 to Sept. 28, www.mbam.qc.ca). NATHALIE ATKINSON

Superhero rage powers up big, bold cuff trend

FROM THE STRONG-shouldered power women on spring runways to the blockbuster exhibition Superheroes: Fashion and Fantasy now on at the Costume Institute at the Metropolitan Museum in New York, the superhero has thundered into the fashion world with a Wham! Pow! Snap!

And it appears the rest of the world is also looking for larger-than-life, albeit, familiar heroes. Iron Man recently smashed the movie box office. Anticipation is high for the return of The Dark Knight and even the Incredible Hulk is getting another chance to wow us this summer.

"Over the past couple of years, fashion has seen the return of a more aggressive femininity, one that harks back to the overtly sexualized fashions of the 1980s," says Andrew Bolton, curator of the Met exhibition. "Then as now, the concept of the superhero is reflected in fashions that are both anti-nostalgic and unsentimental."

But what can real women

– mere mortals – take from the wardrobe arsenal of the superheroine to transform herself into a fantastical female?

Few women have the superior bodequalizer — you can be any dress size or age and don a cuff.

The wide

bracelet is a hot fashion item this season and they come in a dazzling array of materials including precious metals, resin, molten leather and gem encrusted. Okay, so there aren't any made of "feminum" like Diana Prince's but they still pack a punch.

Slip on a wide cuff and it immediately gives heft to delicate wrists, signifying strength and power. The over-sized width, like a gauntlet, also gives the appearance of protection.

mind. You feel like a super individual," says jewellery designer and retailer Basia Polowska.

"It exudes a feeling of power and it's visually strong because it's wide. There is a degree of protection. You feel powerful but at the same time you feel protective."

Carole Tanenbaum, the renowned curator and connoisseur of vintage costume jewellery, also agrees that a cuff conveys superstrength. "It's very visual.

expression of the your soul. Other jewellery doesn't have the same impact."

Today you can find a wide cuff from the cheap chic stores like H&M to seriously chic Tiffany's.

"You can get the same effect wherever you get it," says Tanenbaum.

That and the fact you only need one cuff – rather than a stack — to convey that feeling of strength and power. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

A model poses in a salmon-skin bikini from Chilean fashion designer Claudia Escobar.

Bikini made of salmon

almon is one of Scotland's most feted foods, but who knew those scaly skins could be so useful and attractive on anything other than fish?

Chilean fashion designer Claudia Escobar, that's who.

Not only did she see a source of cheap raw material in the masses of salmon skin discarded worldwide every year, she has managed to make it into a line of luxury clothing.

Her Lycra-trimmed, ultramini salmon-skin bikini, which she describes as durable and elastic, sells for about 250 pounds ($494.9) and a pair of trousers fetches around 750 pounds. Workers receive half the sale value and there is almost no overhead, she said.

"It's amazing, it's a used product and you transform it into a product with added value."

Actresses 'get real' in two shows

One musical and one comedy mimic real life

By KIM MANNIX VERMETTE for Metro Ottawa

Profile SOMETIMES

THE MOST challenging roles for performers are those that closely resemble real life.

According to two Ottawa actresses, whose plays open this weekend, those "real" characters can also be the most rewarding to play.

In The Last Five Years, the latest production from Spotlight Musical Theatre, Alexis Fakouri plays Cathy - a struggling young actress in New York involved in a relationship with an aspiring novelist.

"At face value it seems like it would be a simple role to play, since I am a young actress," explains

∰ if you go

The Last Five Years is at the National Gallery of Canada Auditorium, tonight at 8 p.m. and tomorrow at 2 p.m. and 8 p.m. Tickets are $15 and available through the Arts Court Box office at 613-564-7240.

Me, My Mother and a Whistle runs at Club Saw, 67 Nicholas Street, Sunday at 8 p.m., and again on May 27 and June 1. Tickets are $10 for students, $15 for adults and can be purchased at the door.

Fakouri.

"But once I started studying the play, and really listening to the language in the songs, I got a better understanding of who Cathy is. I even got a haircut that suits her, and have learned to walk like her. It's been an amazing journey learning

The Last Five Years, by Jason Robert Brown, is a two-person one-act that uses an interesting form of storytelling to explore a love story, from its beginning to end. The performers, Fakouri and James Barron, sing primarily in soliloquies, save for a middle duet at a pinnacle moment in their relationship.

"It is a musical, but there is nothing cheesy or over the top. It's a very real, tugat-the-heart-strings story and the music is all so accessible and modern," explains Fakouri.

"I like to call it the kind of show that even people who hate musicals will like, and I think most people will relate to it."

Jennifer Brooks, who plays the lead in Me, My Mother and a Whistle, says her's is also the kind of role anyone can relate to. The comedy, written and produced by local playwright Lisa Meuser, premieres at Club Saw on Sunday. It will also be a stage debut for Brooks, who has worked in short film previously, but whose professional background is in marketing.

She says learning the character of Clair - a 22year-old who learns to cope with her loving but kooky mother - came surprisingly naturally.

"When I first got the script I was reading it with my mom and she laughed and said 'This is us.' I think it's classic in there's some of every mother/daughter relationship in there, and the writing is fantastic," says Brooks.

Meuser says writing comedy, and drawing on experiences from her own life, is the best way to express her creativity and her sense of humour

"I love to laugh. My dad always said that the best writers write what they know, but of course I exaggerate the heck out of it,'

Putting a face to 'misunderstood' Canadian painter aterina Atanassova laughs when I note her deep affection for the work of painter F.H. Varley.

"Yes, you can tell that I definitely love his work," she agrees. "He is one of the foremost portrait artists and he deserves his place in Canadian art history."

Atanassova, in turn, is one of the foremost experts on the work of Frederick Horsman Varley. She is curator of the Varley Art Gallery in Unionville, and the curator of the vast exhibit, F.H. Varley: Portraits Into the Light, which is now on display at the Canadian Museum of Nature.

It is Atanassova's mission to help raise the profile of Varley, whom she considers both revered and underestimated all at the same time.

"Even media writing about him in his time described him as one of the most misunderstood Canadian painters," she explains. "His influence as part of the Group of Seven, creating those landscapes, is evident, but he was so much more than that'

While the Group of Seven created wilderness paintings that seemed "untouched by civilization," Atanassova says Varley was influential in his ability to paint human faces into the landscapes.

One of his early works, Indian Summer, is a great example of putting the person into nature, Atanassova says. But she says it is his technique and skill in capturing facial nuances that also makes him an artist worthy of praise.

"He liked to paint all faces - friends, family, anyone who commissioned him to paint their picture."

That is why there is such variety within the 70 pieces displayed in the exhibit. There are "society" portraits, as well as more personal depictions of Varley's relatives and friends. And, Atanassova adds, she's espe-

shown publicly for the first

"I think it's a great way to see this new aspect of Varley that's rarely seen," Atanassova says. "Little gems of art that anyone can appreciate."

After covering hard news for a few years, Kim discovered her real passion – writing about the wonderful world of music, theatre, visual arts and literature.

Battle of the exes

enise Richards is a big liar, claim actor Charlie Sheen's friends – one of whom says she "gets more than enough money from Charlie to never have to work, much less do a reality show that exploits the kids," Page-Six.com reports.

Sheen and his friends are furious the actress has taped a reality show debuting this weekend on E! called It's Complicated, which also features the ex-spouses' two daughters, Sam and Lola.

In her bid to promote the show, Richards went on Today, The View and Larry King Live to explain she did it to make money to support her children.

But, "Denise gets $52,000 (US) a month tax-free in child support," a Sheen insider fumed. "Most people in America can figure out how to live on that, but Denise can't?"

In addition to the child support, Richards got 60,000 a month (also tax-free) for two years in alimony – adding up to $1.44 million. Richards also gets a chunk of Sheen's sitcom, Two And A Half Men, which "eventually will net her up to $25 million," the source said.

Earlier this week, Sheen released e-mails purportedly sent from Richards to his fiancée, Brooke Mueller, in which Richards states she wants another baby and had asked for a sample of his sperm. But Richards said on Today that those "made up" e-mails were not from her.

A rep for Richards didn't return our calls.

A rep for Sheen released a statement saying, "The mere fact that she continues to publicly discuss and harass both Brooke and me three years after our separation, which for the record is longer than the actual length of the marriage, is beyond desperate and speaks volumes." Metro News Services

"I believe (alcoholism) is a disease. I don't think you can mess with it," Davis adds.

She says people used to say to her, " 'Couldn't you just have one glass of champagne?' And I would say, 'No,' " Davis recalls. "I'm doing well. I still have occasional bad days. Why risk it?"
